“CONSPIRACY OF POWER”

THE DONALD TRUMP ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

A Conversation with Barr McClellan and B.R. Stokes

B.R. Stokes: Welcome, my fellow patriots, to another edition of "RedWave Report." Tonight, I have the honor of welcoming a special guest, the renowned conservative strategist and conspiracy theorist, Barr McClellan. Barr, thank you for joining me.

Barr McClellan: Thank you, B.R. It's always a pleasure to join you and engage in these thought-provoking conversations. I must say, your reputation for seeking the truth, no matter how controversial, precedes you.

B.R. Stokes: Well, Barr, tonight we find ourselves in the midst of a national crisis following the shocking assassination attempt on former President Donald Trump. I want to explore the conspiracy theories swirling around this event, and I know you have some unique insights to share. So, tell me, Barr, what's your take on this tragic incident?

Barr McClellan: Ah, B.R., I must say, this event has certainly shaken the political landscape. My initial reaction, like many Americans, was one of shock and concern. My thoughts and prayers are with President Trump and the other victims of this heinous act.

B.R. Stokes: Absolutely, Barr. This shooting has affected us all, regardless of political affiliation. Now, I know you've considered various conspiracy theories surrounding this event. What are your thoughts on the speculation that the right is attempting to spin this assassination attempt to hurt Trump?

Barr McClellan: Well, B.R., that's an interesting theory, and one that I've given some thought. You see, the right-wing media and some conservative pundits have indeed tried to spin this incident to their advantage. They've suggested that the shooting was somehow staged or that it was a false flag operation designed to make Trump look like a victim and gain sympathy.

B.R. Stokes: That's a concerning narrative, Barr. Do you believe there's any truth to it?

Barr McClellan: You know, B.R., I must admit that I find this particular conspiracy theory rather far-fetched. The idea that Trump or his supporters would stage an assassination attempt to gain political advantage is, in my opinion, preposterous. It undermines the very real danger that Trump faced and the trauma he endured.

B.R. Stokes: So, you're saying this theory will backfire on those who propagate it?

Barr McClellan: Exactly, B.R. In my view, this attempt on Trump's life will inevitably lead to a surge of support for him. Americans have a way of rallying behind leaders who have faced adversity. We saw it after the January 6th Capitol riots, and we're seeing it now. Trump has become a symbol of resilience and defiance in the face of danger.

B.R. Stokes: Fascinating. So, you're saying that this shooting, rather than hurting Trump, will actually empower him?

Barr McClellan: Precisely, B.R. This incident has the potential to unite his supporters and attract moderates who value stability and strength. It's a classic case of turning a threat into an opportunity. Trump has always been a master of leveraging adversity to his advantage, and I believe he will do the same with this shooting.

B.R. Stokes: That's an intriguing perspective, Barr. So, in your opinion, this conspiracy theory spun by the right will ultimately backfire on them?

Barr McClellan: Absolutely, B.R. In their attempt to discredit Trump, they've underestimated the power of his brand and his connection with the American people. This shooting has only served to highlight his resilience and determination, and it will inevitably lead to a boost in his support.

B.R. Stokes: Well, Barr, your insights never cease to amaze me. Your ability to navigate the complexities of politics and conspiracy theory is truly remarkable. However, you are a conspiracy theorist, so let's get into this incident from every angle, starting with the official story.

The Official Narrative: A Lone Wolf Attack

The official story, as presented by law enforcement and the media, depicts a lone wolf attacker, Thomas Matthew Crooks, a 20-year-old with no known political affiliations. He purchased a rifle and ammunition on the day of the shooting and fired multiple shots at Trump from a nearby building. The Secret Service swiftly neutralized Crooks, and the incident was labeled a random act of political violence.

Now, my fellow patriots, let us explore the conspiracy theory that has gained traction in certain circles. This theory posits that the shooting was a staged event, carefully crafted to bolster Trump's political aspirations. Proponents of this theory argue that the timing of the shooting, just days before the Republican National Convention, is too coincidental to ignore. They suggest that Trump's team staged the event to portray him as a victim, rallying supporters behind him and boosting his poll numbers.

As a conspiracy theorist, I must consider all possibilities. And so, I ask: What if this theory holds a kernel of truth? What if the shooting was indeed a cynical manipulation of public sentiment? With Trump's campaign struggling in the polls, the incident provided an opportunity to tap into the emotions of the American people. It shifted the narrative, portraying Trump as a martyr and a victim of political violence.

Imagine, for a moment, that this theory could be correct. It would mean that someone attempted to exploit a national tragedy for political gain. They would have played fears of our desire for stability, and our loyalty to the president. It would be a blatant abuse of power, manipulating public sentiment to achieve their political goals.

The Web of Connections: A Trail of Intrigue

Let's examine the web of connections that give rise to this conspiracy theory. First, there's the death of the shooter, leaving no loose ends to tie him to any wider conspiracy. Then, there are reports of bystanders spotting Crooks with a rifle prior to the shooting, yet no action was taken to stop him. And what of the explosives found in his possession? Were they intended for a larger plot that never came to light?

These questions, my friends, cast a shadow of doubt on the official narrative. They suggest a potential cover-up, a web of deceit woven to protect the true masterminds behind the shooting. It's a chilling thought, but one that cannot be ignored.

The Personal Motive: A Troubled Past

Digging into Crook's background, investigators uncovered a history of bullying and isolation. Could this have been a motive for his actions? Was the shooting a cry for attention, a desperate act of a troubled soul? Or was it a convenient cover story, crafted to divert attention from the true masterminds? These questions add a layer of complexity to the conspiracy.

In the end, my fellow Americans, the truth may never be fully known. The official narrative of a lone wolf attacker may hold some water, but there are also hints of a deeper conspiracy lurking in the shadows. As a conspiracy theorist, I present these theories not as fact but as possibilities worth considering.

I urge you to question everything, to seek the truth for yourselves. Was the shooting a random act of violence, or was it a carefully crafted plot to actually kill Trump, or to manipulate public sentiment? Only time and further investigation will tell.

Remember, in the world of politics, nothing is ever as it seems. Power is a game, and those who play it will stop at nothing to achieve their goals. So, my fellow patriots, stay vigilant, question authority, and trust no one. Together, we will navigate the treacherous waters of conspiracy and uncover the truth.

Unraveling the Timeline of the Trump Shooting

In the aftermath of the shocking assassination attempt on former President Donald Trump, a timeline of events emerged, providing a minute-by-minute account of that fateful day. Join me, B.R. "The Maverick" Stokes, as we dissect the moments leading up to the shooting and the subsequent response from political leaders.

July 13, 2024: The Day of the Shooting

5:00 p.m. EST: Trump's rally began in Butler, Pennsylvania. The atmosphere was electric as supporters gathered to hear the former president speak. Little did they know that tragedy would soon strike.

6:02 p.m. EST: Trump took the stage, greeted by enthusiastic cheers from the crowd. He began his speech, unaware of the danger that awaited him.

6:11 p.m. EST: Gunshots rang out, shattering the peaceful gathering. Thomas Matthew Crooks, positioned on a nearby rooftop, fired multiple shots toward the stage. Chaos ensued as the crowd scrambled for safety.

6:15 p.m. EST: U.S. Secret Service agents sprang into action, neutralizing the shooter within seconds. Their swift response likely saved countless lives, including that of the former president.

6:30 p.m. EST: Trump was rushed off the stage and taken to a nearby medical facility for evaluation. Initial reports indicated that he was "fine" and being checked over by medical professionals.

7:58 p.m. EST: President Joe Biden issued a statement, expressing gratitude that Trump was safe and offering prayers for the former president and those affected by the shooting.

8:00 p.m. EST: Biden delivered remarks from the Oval Office, addressing the nation about the shooting. He assured the public that Trump was doing well and announced that he had directed the Secret Service to review security measures for the upcoming Republican National Convention.

8:39 p.m. EST: Butler County District Attorney Richard Goldinger confirmed that the shooter was dead and provided an update on the casualties: one rally attendee had been killed, and another was seriously injured.

8:42 p.m. EST: Trump himself took to Truth Social, reassuring his supporters that he was doing well. He thanked the Secret Service for their rapid response and expressed his condolences to the family of the deceased rally attendee.

9:47 p.m. EST: The Trump campaign and the Republican National Committee released a joint statement, confirming that the Republican National Convention would proceed as scheduled. They asserted that Trump would be in attendance, demonstrating his resilience and determination.

10:37 p.m. EST: House Speaker Mike Johnson announced that the House would conduct an investigation into the assassination attempt, seeking answers and accountability.

July 14, 2024: The Aftermath

1:49 a.m. EST: The FBI identified the shooter as Thomas Matthew Crooks, a 20-year-old from Pennsylvania. The investigation into his motives and any potential accomplices continued.

10:51 a.m. EST: U.S. House Representatives Ritchie Torres and Mike Lawler introduced legislation to enhance Secret Service protections for Biden, Trump, and Robert F. Kennedy Jr., recognizing the ongoing threats to their safety.

12:28 p.m. EST: Pennsylvania Governor Josh Shapiro identified the rally attendee who was killed as Corey Comperatore, a former fire chief and a beloved member of his community.

2:05 p.m. EST: Biden delivered additional remarks, announcing that he had ordered an independent review of the security measures at Trump's rally. He reiterated his commitment to ensuring the safety of all presidential candidates.

July 15, 2024: Moving Forward

8:00 p.m. EST: President Biden addressed the nation once again, this time to announce that he had ordered Secret Service protection for Robert F. Kennedy Jr., a third-party candidate who had also faced threats. Biden emphasized the importance of keeping all candidates safe during the election season.

In the days and weeks that followed, the nation continued to heal from the shocking assassination attempt. The investigation into the shooting remained ongoing, with law enforcement officials working tirelessly to uncover all the facts. Political leaders across the country called for unity and a return to civility, reminding Americans of the importance of peaceful discourse and the value of democracy.

As the timeline of events unfolded, the nation was reminded of the fragility of our democratic process and the importance of protecting our leaders and upholding the values we hold dear. The shooting of former President Trump served as a stark reminder that political violence has no place in our society, and that the safety of our leaders must always come first.

Barr McClellan Analyzes the Aftermath

In the wake of the assassination attempt on former President Donald Trump, the nation was left reeling, searching for answers and unity. Political leaders from both sides of the aisle spoke out, offering prayers, condolences, and calls for healing. In this edition, we turn to conservative insider, Barr McClellan, for his unique perspective on the responses from Trump, Biden, and other prominent figures

Former President Donald Trump, ever the resilient fighter, took to Truth Social to address the nation following the shooting. In his statement, Trump thanked the Secret Service and law enforcement for their rapid response, expressing gratitude for their protection. He also extended his condolences to the family of the deceased rally attendee, Corey Comperatore, and wished a speedy recovery to those injured.

Trump's words, as quoted by McClellan, reflected his characteristic defiance in the face of adversity: "We will FEAR NOT, but instead remain resilient in our Faith and Defiant in the face of Wickedness." He emphasized the need for Americans to stand united and strong, refusing to let evil triumph. Trump's message resonated with his supporters, who admired his strength and determination in the face of danger.

McClellan, a longtime Trump supporter, praised the former president's response, stating, "Trump's words struck a chord with Americans across the country. He showed his unwavering spirit and reminded us that we must not let this act of wickedness deter us from standing tall and proud." McClellan went on to highlight Trump's reference to God, noting that it was "divine intervention" that had prevented a tragedy of greater proportions.

President Joe Biden, in his address to the nation, struck a more conciliatory tone, calling for unity and an end to political violence. He expressed gratitude that Trump was safe and offered prayers for the former president and the victims of the shooting. Biden's words, as quoted by McClellan, emphasized the need to "lower the temperature in our politics" and remember that "we are not enemies. We're neighbors, friends, coworkers, citizens."

McClellan, ever the skeptic, acknowledged Biden's call for unity but questioned the timing of his address, suggesting that it was an attempt to shift the narrative away from the shooting and onto his own agenda. He criticized Biden's reference to the January 6th Capitol riots, arguing that it was a "false equivalence" to compare peaceful Trump supporters to violent rioters. McClellan's words reflected his belief in the need for a strong, united front against political violence while also defending the rights of conservative Americans.

McClellan also analyzed the responses from other prominent political figures, including Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, and House Speaker Mike Johnson. He noted the swift condemnation of the shooting from both sides of the aisle, with leaders expressing relief that Trump was safe and offering prayers for the victims. However, McClellan criticized the lack of acknowledgment from some Democratic leaders regarding the impact of their own rhetoric on political violence.

Continuation with Barr McClellan on the Failures of the Day

B.R. Stokes: Barr, as we continue our conversation, I want to look into the failures that occurred on the day of the shooting. There were reports of bystanders spotting the shooter, Thomas Crooks, prior to the incident, yet no action was taken to stop him. What are your thoughts on these security lapses, and how do they fit into your conspiracy theory?

Barr McClellan: Ah, B.R., those security lapses are indeed concerning and raise questions about the overall preparedness for such an event. You see, in my conspiracy theory, "Power," I consider those failures as potential evidence of a wider conspiracy.

B.R. Stokes: Explain that to our audience, Barr. How do these security lapses support your theory?

Barr McClellan: Well, it's intriguing, isn't it? The fact that bystanders spotted Crooks with a rifle and alerted law enforcement, yet no immediate action was taken, suggests a potential breakdown in communication or even a deliberate delay. It's as if someone wanted to ensure that the shooting would take place, unhindered.

B.R. Stokes: That's a chilling perspective, Barr. Are you suggesting that someone within the security detail or law enforcement may have been complicit?

Barr McClellan: I'm saying, B.R., that we cannot rule out the possibility of inside involvement. It's a disturbing thought, but one that must be considered. These security lapses only add to the web of intrigue surrounding this event.

B.R. Stokes: So, in your theory, "Power," these failures were intentional, designed to allow the shooting to unfold?

Barr McClellan: Not necessarily intentional, B.R., but they certainly played into the hands of those seeking to exploit this tragedy for political gain. You see, in the world of conspiracy, nothing is random. Every action, every failure, has the potential to be manipulated to serve a hidden agenda.

B.R. Stokes: Fascinating. So, you're saying that these security lapses only further support your theory that the shooting was a power play to benefit Trump?

Barr McClellan: Well, B.R. The shooting itself was a tragic and unforeseen event, but the response to it, the narrative that unfolded, that's where the power play comes into play. Those security lapses allowed the shooting to occur, and then the narrative of Trump as a victim took center stage. But Consider this fact, no one can purposely graze your ear from 300 yard away; one half inch to the right and we would be having a very different discussion.

B.R. Stokes: So, in your opinion, this conspiracy theory will ultimately backfire on those who attempt to use it against Trump?

Barr McClellan: Absolutely, B.R. In their attempt to discredit Trump or create a false narrative, they have underestimated the resilience of the American people and their support for a leader who has faced adversity. This shooting, rather than hurting Trump, will only empower him and unite his supporters behind him.

B.R. Stokes: Well, Barr, your insights never cease to amaze me. Your ability to navigate the complexities of conspiracy and politics is truly remarkable. Thank you for shedding light on these security lapses and how they fit into your theory.

Barr McClellan: Thank you, B.R. It's important that we explore all angles and consider the potential failures that allowed this tragedy to unfold. It's through understanding these lapses that we can improve security measures and prevent future incidents.

B.R. Stokes: Wise words, indeed, Barr. Your insights will no doubt spark further discussion and analysis. And with that, we conclude another segment of "RedWave Report." Stay tuned as we continue to unravel the mysteries and conspiracies surrounding this shooting.

McClellan quoted , who stated, "America is a democracy. Political violence of any kind is never acceptable."

McClellan agreed with Jeffries' sentiment but questioned the silence from some Democratic leaders on the need to tone down inflammatory rhetoric. He argued that political leaders on both sides must take responsibility for their words and actions, as they have the power to influence the tone of political discourse.

Eyewitness Accounts: A Troubling Narrative

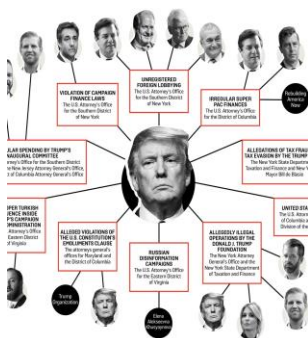

McClellan also turned his attention to eyewitness accounts of the shooting, including that of Mike DiFrischia, who noticed the shooter on the roof and alerted law enforcement. McClellan described the chilling moments leading up to the shooting, as DiFrischia and his wife watched in horror, their warnings seemingly falling on deaf ears.

McClellan quoted DiFrischia as saying, "I knew he was getting into position to shoot something... I was like, my God, my heart dropped." He used this account to highlight the failures in security and the need for increased vigilance at political rallies.

Concluding our Conversation with Barr McClellan: Unraveling the Conspiracy of "Power"

B.R. Stokes: So, Barr. Our exploration of the conspiracy theories surrounding this event has certainly sparked intrigue among our listeners and readers. Now, I know our people are eager to hear more about your theory, "Power." Can you give us a summary of this conspiracy and your insights into the shooting?

Barr McClellan: Absolutely, B.R. My theory, "Power," looks into the underlying forces at play in the aftermath of the shooting. You see, B.R., the shooting of Trump wasn't just an isolated incident. It set off a chain reaction of political maneuvering and a battle for power.

B.R. Stokes: Intriguing. So, tell us, Barr, what specific aspects of this conspiracy theory capture your attention?

Barr McClellan: Well, B.R., my theory focuses on the idea that the shooting was a pivotal moment that shifted the political landscape. It provided an opportunity for certain individuals and factions to gain influence and further their agendas. You see, power is a game, and those who play it will stop at nothing to achieve their goals.

B.R. Stokes: That's a chilling perspective, Barr. Are you suggesting that there were individuals within Trump's circle or even his opposition who saw this tragedy as an opportunity?

Barr McClellan: Precisely, B.R. In the world of politics, tragedy can be exploited for personal gain. In this case, the shooting of Trump allowed certain individuals to portray him as a victim, a fighter, and a symbol of resilience. It shifted the narrative and gave his campaign a boost, potentially attracting moderates who value stability and strength.

B.R. Stokes: Fascinating. So, you're saying that this shooting, rather than hurting Trump, actually empowered him and those around him?

Barr McClellan: Exactly, B.R. It's a classic case of turning a threat into an opportunity. Trump has always been a master of leveraging adversity to his advantage, and this incident was no different. The shooting united his supporters and attracted the attention of undecided voters.

B.R. Stokes: That's a compelling perspective, Barr. So, in your opinion, this conspiracy theory of "Power" ultimately benefited Trump and his campaign?

Barr McClellan: Absolutely, B.R. And that's why I wanted to take this opportunity to make a statement of support for

Trump. You see, my fellow patriots, while I may explore conspiracy theories and consider all

possibilities, my loyalty

lies with our former president.

B.R. Stokes: Go on, Barr. We'd love to hear your statement of support for Trump.

Barr McClellan: My fellow Americans, in the wake of this tragic shooting, I want to make one thing abundantly clear: I stand firmly and unequivocally with former President Donald Trump. I believe he is the leader our nation needs at this pivotal moment in time.

You see, Trump embodies the resilience, strength, and determination that our country requires to navigate these challenging times. He has faced adversity head-on and emerged stronger than ever. This shooting has only served to highlight his unwavering spirit and his connection with the American people.

So, let us put aside our differences and unite behind Trump. Let us channel our energy into ensuring his victory in the upcoming election. Not because of sympathy or pity, but because he is the leader who will guide our nation toward a brighter future.

B.R. Stokes: Well, Barr, your statement of support for Trump is truly inspiring. Your ability to navigate the complexities of conspiracy theory and politics is remarkable. Thank you for sharing your insights and your unwavering support for our former president.

: Thank you, B.R. It's been an honor to join you once again and share my thoughts with your audience. Remember, my fellow patriots, in the world of politics, nothing is more powerful than unity. Stay vigilant, question everything, and always seek the truth.

B.R. Stokes: Wise words, indeed, Barr. And with that, we conclude another edition of "RedWave Report." Join us next time as we continue to explore the fascinating world of conspiracy and politics. Good night, and stay vigilant!
